LONDON & SOUTH WESTERN RAILWAY STATIONS

PART II - LONDON SUBURBAN LINES

With a lengthy main line from Waterloo to Cornwall, and important lines to Portsmouth, Southampton and Bournemouth, the LSWR was the largest of the Southern companies. The following list of station views from the Lens of Sutton Collection includes the South Western suburban lines that radiated from London to destinations in Middlesex and Surrey. For completeness, the list includes joint lines such as the West London Extension Railway (WLER), and the short-lived Surrey Border & Camberley Railway (SBCR) - an extensive miniature railway that flourished prior to World War II. In general, the westernmost limits of the suburban area are assumed to be Farnborough, Farnham, Guildford and Reading - the latter being reached by means of running powers over part of the South Eastern Railway.
