LONDON & SOUTH WESTERN RAILWAY STATIONS

PART III - HAMPSHIRE LINES

With its lengthy main line from Waterloo to Cornwall, and important lines to Portsmouth, Southampton and Bournemouth, the L&SWR was the largest of the Southern companies. The following list of station views from the Lens of Sutton Collection includes the West of England main line between Brookwood and Salisbury, together with the Portsmouth and Bournemouth routes and various connecting branch lines. The westernmost limits of the "Hampshire" section are assumed to be Salisbury and Broadstone Junction, near Poole, while in the east the boundaries are delineated by the outer suburban stations of Guildford, Woking, Brookwood and Camberley - stations to the west and east of those points being listed in the LSWR West-of-England and London Suburban catalogues respectively. The catalogue also includes a number of views taken on the Longmoor Military Railway, which formed a connection between the LSWR stations at Liss and Bordon.
